Montmelo Oak Nature D 3661 | EXQUISIT PLUS

The wide boards in warm, sand-colored Montmelo Oak Nature conjure up the beach right at your feet.

What more do you need to feel at ease?

Dear friends of custom-designed rooms,

A new experience is always exciting because you learn something new. That's exactly what I've experienced in recent years. The coronavirus pandemic completely changed my everyday life as a salesman. For more than 30 years, I have traveled all over the world and never stopped for long in one place. Now I was able to experience what it was like to be at home. This time has been valuable for me. Like many of you, I have realized quite clearly what is important to me in my life and surroundings: people and nature.

What did I do? What many of you also did! Our home became an even more beautiful retreat, and I got out into nature a lot more – hiking and cycling. The global movement to renew our living spaces as we stay home was the inspiration behind our Your Home. campaign. In this brochure, we will show you selected decors from the KRONOTEX collection, covering a range of different themes.

Being out in nature always gives me strength, energy and inspiration. That's why I love to be surrounded by wood, which is exactly what I experience as Sales Director for flooring at SWISS KRONO, because our products are all made from wood from sustainable forestry. We are one of the biggest customers of the Forst Brandenburg state forestry service, which we will introduce to you later in our magazine. We buy our wood, whenever possible, from the local region around our plant.

Admittedly, sometimes I still find myself stopping what I'm doing and gazing at the world map. As a passionate salesman, of course I miss traveling.

But when I think that the flooring we create in our town of Heiligengrabe, Germany is found in homes all around the world, then I realize how many people we are still closely connected to in this way. That's a great feeling. There is a lot of strength to be found in it, and a certainty that we will still be able to break new ground together in the future. Let's take the opportunity these new experiences have brought to think about things in a new way.

I hope you enjoy many exciting discoveries as you read our magazine.

Pettersson Oak Beige D 4763 | EXQUISIT

The harmonious Pettersson Oak Beige decor creates a natural look and conjures up a feeling of warmth and balance.

For our Your Home. campaign, we filmed together with the rosengrün agency, the team from the ANNEWAND Studio in Berlin and the photographer Noel Richter.

The Berlin locations of Gebrüder Fritz on the Kurfürstendamm, Carl Fritz in Mitte and Gorki in Prenzlauer Berg offered the perfect conditions for presenting the KRONOTEX lifestyle.

The styling for the sets was as diverse as the 171 KRONOTEX decors themselves – sometimes opulent, sometimes minimalist, sometimes intense, sometimes playful.

Interior designer Anabell Teepe reveals in an interview just what creates a successful interior design and what determines whether a room makes a good impression or not.

Interior architecture,
home styling & set design

Alexandra Möhlmann & Anabell Teepe

“How you live is part of your personality – unique, colorful, practical and open.
We create a stage for personalities and products, all with a touch of charm and a hint of humor.
At the same time, we look for sustainable, functional solutions and think outside the box.

And we are partial to dramatic color accents.”

Let's start with the most difficult question: what actually makes a good interior design?

At best, interior design is something you can't really describe. It's more of a feeling, a certain 'je ne sais quoi.' When I take a look around a room and something clearly develops in my mind, then that's a successful interior design.

Courage plays a big role in furnishing a room. Daring to do something, risking going with apparent opposites. That creates the ambience in a room. Colors, for example, are a really simple way of creating an essential break or accent in a room.

What were the main thoughts behind the set styling for the KRONOTEX shoot?

For the KRONOTEX sets, it was important for us to appeal to as many people as possible, all with very different tastes, but also to maintain a design language that was recognizable and memorable. So we needed the proverbial common thread. The floor is the star and everything else is there as accessories. We wanted to show the customers how KRONOTEX floors could work in their homes. Our sets are meant to spark the imagination. Anyone and everyone should be able to recognize themselves in the various motifs or dream themselves into them.

A cloud of pampas is the visual highlight in the room.

Where does your room concept start?

Whether it's for an interior design or a set for a shoot, the concept starts with listening. First of all, we always discuss in great detail what our client's vision is. Then we develop the stories and put feelings to words. Our work is often about nuances of dark and light, open and closed, natural or clean.

How significant is the flooring in a room?

In my opinion, there are two different approaches here. First, the floor can act as a stage. It provides the furniture and colors in the room with the space and calm they need. So the floor stays more in the background. Or, secondly, the floor can be the eye-catching feature in the room and be combined with matching, often simpler-looking furniture that we call extras. So, the floor makes its own statement.

Whatever you do, it's important that the overall ambience of the room works. For example, if I've got a lot of wooden furniture, I keep the floor plainer. Colors on the walls and on the ceiling act as good counterparts to the floor.

The interior designer picks up on trends using accessories like cushions.

Port Oak Medium
D 4611 | ROBUSTO

The creamy beige of the Port Oak Medium decor creates a warm and cozy atmosphere in the room. The strong grain ensures a natural country home look.

Interview with...

Anabell Teepe

What do I need to pay particular attention to when it comes to room size and light?

Before starting a design, an important thing for me is to be clear about the story the room is supposed to be telling. Then nothing is off limits and anything is possible! For example, I can create a warm atmosphere with dark colors on the ceiling. Dark floors make small rooms feel cozy. Heavy furniture makes them even cozier.

It's also important to create different levels visually in a room. In front of a dark blue wall, for example, I can put a very large bed that is also blue. To the eye, the bed adds an extra level. And voilà! More depth! I stretch the room vertically by having tall furniture, or pictures that I hang above the magical boundary of the top of the door, for example, or using floor-length curtains that are mounted just below the ceiling.

I can also achieve different effects with how the floor is laid: laying it lengthwise will make a narrow hallway look much bigger. The space is elongated visually. By laying it crosswise, I can broaden a room and make it look wider than it really is. The way the light falls also makes a difference, because laying the floor at right angles to the direction of the light creates greater depth. This brings out the character of the floor much more intensely.

How do I deal with trends?

Trends do play their part in my interior designs, mainly when it comes to decoration and color, not so much for basics like floors and furniture. As Germans, we are very conservative in this respect. We think more about the question of what we'll still like in 10 years' time. The Dutch often behave very differently. There, homes are redecorated every five years. So people need to decide for themselves how they want to handle trends. Do I like consistency in life or do I love change? When it comes to choosing flooring, I always advise people not to follow a trend, but to go for more of a timeless look.

The cool green of eucalyptus goes perfectly with the grey beige of the room.

Anabell's tip!

Always think about the color of the walls as well when you decide to get new flooring, because practically every floor will look severe in contrast to endless amounts of white on the walls. So, be brave with color, even if it's just a slightly tinted greige.

The KRONOTEX flooring collection includes more than 170 decors in over 200 products.

Achim Scholz is responsible for product management. With a natural curiosity and instinct for trends, he gathers new ideas for decor design from all around the world.

A native of the Sauerland region of Germany, he found the inspiration for the two new Canyon Maple decors while hiking in the Alps. He was captivated by the wealth of colors revealed in the rocks by the sunlight, so he set out to recreate this color palette on flooring. The ideal species of tree was soon found: maple, as its distinctive grain also has an intense and unique color. The design for the Canyon Maple decor, with its light and dark tones, was created in detail based on a longitudinal cut of the tree.

"This flooring is quite daring", says Product Manager Achim Scholz excitedly. "Anyone who chooses Canyon Maple decors will add character and individuality to their room!"

For trailblazers

The Matterhorn in the Valais Alps is 4,478 m tall and is one of Switzerland's best-known landmarks. Its distinctive shape and history have made it one of the most famous mountains in the world.

On July 14, 1865, Edward Whymper and his seven-strong team conquered it for the first time. Only three of the climbers made it back alive. Two days after Whymper, Jean-Antoine Carrel also successfully completed the ascent.

You can make your little breaks even more effective by adding your favorite music, thereby improving your health at the same time – just sing along! Singing is a great breathing exercise; it will help to strengthen your diaphragm and the muscles between your ribs. Enjoy!

Anabell's tip!

Do's & don'ts of mixing and matching

I'm not a fan of rules for furnishings. If it feels good, then it's allowed. Mixing three different colored woods with each other like in our room? Absolutely! Do it. Be brave. Trust your intuition.

Then add a variety of chairs made from different, contrasting materials? Yes! Cool. It works.

Why? Because contrasts are good for the eyes. There are ways to lessen certain contrasts or deliberately emphasize them. In this room, for example, we have emphasized the horizontal lines in particular through the color of the floor and the long table. The direction of the boards, combined with the fall of the light, highlights the stripes in the floor once again. Another small detail: the stripes are picked up again in the napkin. At the same time, the accessories break up the linear effect in the room: the tablecloth that's not perfectly straight and the colorful dishes.

Wood, the way to the future?

Tyler Oak D 1208 | AQUA ROBUSTO

The flickering interplay of colors is an experience for every onlooker. The bright reflections on this rich, dark flooring create a powerful atmosphere that is certain to captivate.

Watch
the film

It is unusual to start an interview with the concluding statement, but wood expert Thomas Schmaltz ended our conversation with a sentence that made us think. He compares his task to a German metaphor that actually means the exact opposite of what he is dealing with: the so-called “Holzweg” or dead-end. Hang on a second – what did he just say? That he’s happy to be heading down a dead-end street? “Auf dem Holzweg sein” (lit: “on the wood path”) is a well-known phrase in German. It is used when you find yourself at a dead end or on the wrong track. So, how can this proverbial dead-end lead to the future? That really got me thinking as Thomas Schmaltz left, because a rational mind like that of a Quality Manager wouldn’t say something like that for no reason. But first things first, because our interview was actually all about quality standards, technical developments and product features.

Laminate made it big in the rapidly growing housing construction market at the start of the 1990s. When you look at the product now, 30 years later, how has it changed since then?

Thomas Schmaltz: Laminate then and laminate now are actually worlds apart. More than anything, the surface of the flooring has improved incredibly from a technological perspective. It is now extremely durable and also easy to maintain. The wear resistance in the high-end ranges is so high that you could lay laminate in a night club without any problem. You can’t dance your way through the surface – that’s guaranteed. That’s why we provide a warranty of up to 30 years for wear on our KRONOTEX products. We like to call that ‘over-engineering’. Our product performs much better than it claims to do. The core wooden board has also been subject to ongoing development. Our laminate meets the highest standards for the toughest demands, for healthy living environments and for environmental impact. These days, only experts are able to visually distinguish laminate from parquet flooring once it has been laid. Our designers at KRONOTEX do an amazing job.

What other benefits do the advanced technological properties of laminate offer customers?

A whole range! In addition to the incredibly durable surface, laminate is also much more resistant to splashed water. This applies to all KRONOTEX floors. The core board, decor and click connection all play their part in this. We have now also developed the AQUA ROBUSTO collection, which is water resistant. All of these properties make laminate a faithful and easy-to-maintain companion, both in living spaces and for commercial use. It is also really easy to lay. I would only advise hiring a specialist company for our herringbone products, if you’re not a very experienced handyperson. To get a great result, you need to work with great precision, because the shape and size, combined with how it is laid, means that there are many more connection points. Small inaccuracies can add up quickly and create avoidable problems.

The latest buzzwords are healthy living and environmental compatibility: All KRONOTEX floors carry the German government’s Blue Angel eco-label and are certified with national declarations in many other countries. What does that mean for the products?

It’s increasingly important – and rightly so, I believe. The Blue Angel is the oldest eco-label in the world and is widely accepted even abroad. The increasing importance of environmental declarations for customers when making purchasing decisions is forcing companies in every industry to keep developing their products and make their manufacturing methods sustainable. Those are precisely our principles at SWISS KRONO. Our flooring is tested and certified to the highest possible standards. In France, for example, there is a VOC declaration, which the EU has not yet been able to agree on. This certification differentiates between C, B, A and A+. All KRONOTEX flooring meets the A+ standard. There are also voluntary certifications, such as ‘Greenguard’ and ‘Floorscore’ in the USA.

Among other things, the in-house lab constantly checks the paper density.

Quality Manager Thomas Schmalz and his team are involved in all production processes, from the purchasing of the wood to the shipping of goods.

Together with the decor designers, Thomas Schmalz monitors the color fastness of KRONOTEX flooring.

Our products have been awarded these labels. For 'Greenguard' we are allowed to display the Gold label. It is important for all consumers to know that the emission level for our floors roughly corresponds to that of untreated wood.

The KRONOTEX collections include laminates in thicknesses of 8 to 12 mm. What is important when choosing flooring?

Definitely the place it will be used. Obviously laminate with a thicker core plate will be better quality, but that doesn't always make it the best choice. It comes down to the individual application, and you need to see the entire structure of the floor as a system. Does it come down to the soundproofing or is the installation height of the flooring limited? In an apartment building, the floor is often also important for soundproofing downwards, whereas this usually plays a less significant role in a detached house. Our product range and matching underlay materials enable coordinated solutions to be found, depending on the priorities and preferences of the users. Of course, I also understand that this decision is also very much about design, and can therefore be a very emotional one, but customers can rest assured that the quality of all KRONOTEX floors is excellent!

What is your main function as Quality Manager at SWISS KRONO?

We – my team and I – work to ensure that our customers are happy. For me, there are short-term and long-term aspects to this. The visual appearance of our flooring is one of the key areas in daily production, because this determines every day whether the product will meet the customer's expectations. This means that we check whether the colors in our individual decors and joints always look the same, because when you've chosen flooring and have bought 20 packs of it, each pack needs to contain product that matches with the others, regardless of whether the boards were produced at the same time on the same machine or not. However technically advanced our product is, if it doesn't look right, people won't buy it or lay it.

As well as the appearance, we obviously also check a whole range of properties during production that are important for the performance of the product.

In terms of longer-term aspects, we're talking about the ongoing development of the laminate.

In what ways will laminate be developed in the years ahead?

I see us facing two main tasks. Firstly, customers will very soon demand that laminate production be completely "green". However, I see recycling of laminate to be the key trend. Up to now, the "circular economy" mainly meant power generation for our products, but the material is far too valuable for thermal recycling. I'm convinced that it won't be long before we'll be reprocessing laminate flooring and reusing the recovered raw materials. After all, wood is the only construction material that can really take us into the future!

Wood: the right track to the future?

There was still one issue to resolve that Thomas Schmaltz had raised during our conversation. His metaphor about the dead-end street to the future has now been clarified, because, generations ago, the real "Holzweg", or "wood track," was used to transport felled logs out of the forest to be processed as the only renewable raw material available in really large quantities that people can use for construction. The proverbial wooden track that Thomas Schmaltz described therefore doesn't lead into a dead end, but out of it instead: sustainably, deliberately and with a view to developing new technologies.

Long live the classics. Long live the modern. A contradiction? Not at all, as this room full of creativity shows. The Elba Oak Black herringbone decor is a universal classic that forms a unique symbiosis with the rough, unplastered walls and cool Nordic built-in cupboard. The interplay of the chocolate and coffee tones elegantly defines a space that still seems to yearn for completion. A perfect imperfection.

Did you know?

The herringbone pattern was used in construction the Roman Empire over 2,500 years ago. The Romans paved their streets this way to make them more stable and durable. Around 1,000 years later, the pattern reappeared in large church buildings. Laying the stones in this way enabled the construction of ingenious dome structures without pillars. One of the first floors with a herringbone design appeared in a French castle in the early 16th century. Since then, the herringbone floor has found its way all over the world and is very popular.

Forests in the state of Brandenburg

Size of the forested area:
1.09 million hectares
= 37 % of the state

Germany

The weather couldn't have been more fitting for a January day: it was pouring rain when we met with Hubertus Kraut, Director of the Forst Brandenburg state forestry service. "Our forest needs every drop of water," the forestry expert shouts over to us. We meet up in a small town called Kunsterspring surrounded by an incredibly picturesque landscape. Ancient beech trees and Brandenburg pines stand on the gently rolling hills left behind by the last ice age in Ruppin Switzerland 10,000 years ago. The Kunster river springs up here and winds its way through the valley. In terms of species, the forest in this area is a veritable text book of diversity.

Right in the middle of this idyll is the Forst Brandenburg state forestry service's forestry school. Foresters have been trained here for 70 years; a profession that is now enjoying an increase in popularity. The training center is the starting point for our excursion into the forest. We meet the first-year apprentices as they are harvesting thin pine logs. This wood is also used to produce SWISS KRONO flooring. The wood processing company is one of Forst Brandenburg's biggest customers. The native, certified wood is processed at the SWISS KRONO plant in Heiligengrabe immediately after being harvested.

The pine is the most common tree in the state of Brandenburg.
Why is that?

Hubertus Kraut: Our forests have been used and devastated on a huge scale since the Middle Ages, but especially at the start of the industrial revolution in the 18th and 19th centuries. Massive quantities of wood were needed for construction, for fires and for charcoal. These decimated areas were then reforested at great expense. The pine tree was the first choice for the dry, badly-treated, and poor-quality, sandy soil in Brandenburg. It coped well with these conditions, grew well, and the wood was in high demand. And that is how this type of forestry became established here.

However, the pine tree has always been a native species in our region. It spread as quickly as the birch after the last ice age, but was largely displaced by more demanding species, such as the oak or beech tree, during ongoing natural development in all the prime locations. It's not just environmental conditions that have changed significantly during the past 40 years. Brandenburg is one of the driest regions in Germany. Social demands on the forest are also increasing. The forest has protective functions in particular and is increasingly used for recreational purposes. That means that a change in thinking is needed about the use of forests.

There were extensive forest fires in Brandenburg in recent summers. Is that a consequence of the changing climate?

Pure pine stocks, as are found in many places here, are always vulnerable to insect pests, storms and fires. Dry pine needles on the ground are also a major accelerant for fire. Within Germany, we are at the greatest risk of forest fires here. The rise in temperatures caused by climate change is providing pests with much better conditions to develop. The trees' defense mechanisms have also been weakened by the dry summers. If the forests aren't actively restructured, they will become increasingly unstable in the long term. But it's not just the pine trees that are suffering because of climate change. Our research shows that oak and beech trees are also increasingly being damaged.

The large areas of pine forest in Brandenburg are therefore harboring problems. Would the situation be better if the forests had a different composition? Or, put more simply, are there better or worse trees to have in terms of the climate?

Nature doesn't make those distinctions. The trees that are most suited to the location and are superior to their competitors will prevail. As foresters, we can control these processes through our choice of plants and our forest management, so that we "raise" forests and trees that offer maximum benefits for people. The best model for this is nature itself. 'Ask the trees how they want to be raised, they will teach you better than books will.' This insightful quote comes from Wilhelm Pfeil, who founded the Eberswalde University of Forestry in 1830. To come back to your question: the pine tree provides wonderful timber that is in great demand. So, everything points towards having more stable mixed stocks in the Brandenburg forest, where the pine tree will continue to play a key role.

Wood as a "raw material": how valuable is it? Prices have increased massively in recent months!

Wood is actually invaluable. It is a climate-friendly, mostly local, and renewable raw material that can be used in numerous ways: from house and furniture construction to chemical applications, e.g. for bioplastics. Wood is a product full of character and warmth and it is produced in the most environmentally-friendly factory possible: in the forest! Wood stores CO₂, both in the forest and in the product. This makes it an extremely important factor in achieving climate targets.

Wood is in greater demand than ever before. Can we keep increasing the use of wood and make greater use of our forests?

Not indefinitely. However, the smart use of forests can be increased. We should use wood for products that will last a long time, firstly to absorb carbon for longer to protect the climate, but also to protect our forests. →

Hubertus Kraut
Director of the Forst Brandenburg state forestry service

My favorite tree?

That's easy: the Brandenburg pine, because it lets lots of light through its crown, which allows habitats to form for many other species.

My favorite forests?

Those in my home of Lausitz. I grew up here and have a strong emotional connection to it. But I'm also fascinated by the forests in the western USA and in the Alps. Though I always catch myself analyzing a forest from a professional point of view as I walk through it. That detracts somewhat from just enjoying nature in the forest.

Forests in the state of Brandenburg: Ownership

The Forst Brandenburg state forestry service manages 271,000 hectares of forest on behalf of the state. That is equivalent to a square with sides of 52 kilometers.

What distinguishes sustainable forestry?

The main principle is not to use more wood than is being grown back. That applies on our own doorstep as well as on a global scale. That's why certification systems like PEFC and FSC are needed to make forestry management verifiable.

Forests also serve as recreation areas for people, so are not just used to supply wood as a raw material, but also for leisure purposes.

Both aspects need to be taken into account and given appropriate weight when considering protection of our forests.

The mark of responsible forestry

→ Forests have been used for as long as people have existed. However, as the population has increased, so has the pressure to use forests, both quantitatively and qualitatively. Forests now provide space for development, wind turbines, solar panels, areas for dog walking, mountain bike trails, meditation or just classic hiking.

However, forests should also provide clean air and water and help with soil conservation and biodiversity. In the past, the main focus was on timber production, but these diverse requirements are now coming more to the fore. Climate change is also playing its part in endangering the potential of forests. The use of wood also fits into this range of functions. As the population continues to rise, areas of forest shrink globally, and the risks of climate change continue, these wide-ranging social services provided by forests will become more scarce.

Everyone is talking about “sustainability” these days. What is the connection between forests and sustainability?

The concept of the sustainable economy originated in the wood shortage of the early 18th century that we discussed earlier. The term sustainability was first used in mining in 1713 in a paper written by Carl von Carlowitz, Saxony’s chief mining officer. Ever since that time, at the latest, the principle of not using more wood than is being regrown has applied, so that forests are left in a good or even better state for future generations. Here at the Forst Brandenburg state forestry service, we restore twice as much as we harvest.

Sustainability is an inner mindset for foresters and responsible state and private forest owners. Detailed knowledge about the state of a forest is needed to ensure sustainable use. In large forestry businesses, this is recorded every ten years or so through inventory checks and usage monitoring. Information about the overall state of the forests in Germany is collected as part of periodic forest inventory checks at federal and state levels, plus annual forest condition surveys.

Is the use of wood fundamentally sustainable?

Yes, if the wood is sourced from sustainable and preferably local forestry, where these requirements are legally regulated and monitored, the forest owners commit to the principles independently, and wood is used intelligently and sparingly. Sustainability doesn’t just mean the amount used, but is particularly about the environmental and social aspects. I consider this to be a given in

The budding foresters are also trained to operate harvesters at the forestry school.

Germany, Central Europe and many other countries around the world. Consumers can rely here on PEFC and FSC, the two most important certifications. If they also buy durable products that won't just end up in the bin after a short time, then we'll be close to achieving good sustainability.

And what about the forest in Brandenburg specifically? What impact is use having on the health of the forest?

It's not just use that is having an impact, but also the climate. Fortunately, there was more rainfall in 2021 than in the previous three years. The proportion of significantly damaged trees therefore declined slightly. But the droughts and storms in the past four years have caused almost four million cubic meters of damaged wood. When you consider that approx. 3 million cubic meters are scheduled to be used every year in the Brandenburg forest as a whole, that is a huge amount. We need to replant these deforested areas as soon as possible.

Reforestation is done in addition to restructuring of the forest. What do experts understand this term to mean?

We understand it to mean the long-term restructuring of pure coniferous forests into mixed coniferous and deciduous forests. This means using various silvicultural methods to change the composition of the tree species, build up inventory and differentiate based on age. In 2020, just in the Brandenburg state forest alone, around 3.5 million trees were planted in areas intended for restructuring, including 1.3 million copper beech trees and 1.1 million sessile oaks. Since 1990, more than half of the pine woods in the state forest have been supplemented with deciduous trees.

What is the timescale for restructuring the forests?

It will take a lot of patience and staying power. That said, we do need to up the tempo everywhere. Forest restructuring is a task that will take generations, and there is growing uncertainty about the future and whether trees planted today will survive the next hundred years. Having diversity and a good mix of trees in forests is the top priority, because that will help distribute the risk of individual species dying out. Climate change is forcing us to significantly increase the speed of the restructuring. Large-scale restructuring of forests, which are under various types of ownership, to make them more climate-stable will only be possible with the inclusion of natural Rejuvenation processes are working. →

Composition of the forests in the state of Brandenburg:

Brandenburg – state of nature reserves

A national park, three biosphere reserves and eleven nature parks cover a third of the state's total area. On another 8%, there are 467 nature reserves. Most of them are in the forest. A special feature are Brandenburg's 27 natural forests, which make up around 4% of the state's total area. Forest research is carried out here in undisturbed ecosystems. Other forests across the state will be taken out of use in the years ahead, allowing natural, undisturbed development to take place in around 10% of the total forest area in the future.

Kunsterspring Pine D 3676 | DYNAMIC PLUS

Like a soft, light carpet, the decor stretches out through the room, filling it with lightness and a sense of well-being.

The Kunsterspring Pine decor shows just how closely SWISS KRONO is connected to the region around its factory. Working with local newspapers, the company asked Brandenburg residents to vote for their favorite excursion destinations in their home state. The winning locations would then be included in the names of three laminate floors. As there is also a local zoo in Kunsterspring that has attracted families for decades, this small town was one of the favorites. The decor now links Kunsterspring with the most important tree species in Brandenburg and also provides global advertising for the state.

The most important condition for them is getting the right stocks of roe, red and fallow deer. Hunting therefore plays a prominent role in the question of successful forest restructuring in Brandenburg.

How does the state forest work together with the many private forest owners when it comes to forest restructuring?

Our primary task is to provide expert advice based on our own forestry research in Eberswalde. We have over 150 years of tradition and expertise in forest management and are well-connected throughout Germany. We serve as a role model and an example. Another important aspect is financial support for private forest restructuring measures. As the state service, we are responsible for processing requests and administering funds. Private forest owners are just as conscientious as we are with regard to their important role. Because for all of us, the forest is the basis of our livelihoods.

There is a wonderful smell of earth and wood as we take our leave from Hubertus Kraut and his colleague Dr. Jan Engel by a stack of timber. Even though we are soaked through from the heavy rain on this winter day, we still envy the forestry experts their workplace. When was the last time you breathed in the air of the forest?

To create the perfect new KRONOTEX floor, in addition to your chosen decor you need the right accessories. Which ones are RIGHT is determined both by your personal taste with regard to the skirting boards and by the position of the floor in terms of the underlay required.

White skirting boards are absolutely on trend at the moment, and you will find these in a great variety of styles in our accessories range. For most of the decors in the KRONOTEX collections there are also wood-effect skirting boards to match. Take your pick according to what you like best.

WANTED

Dear customers,
 We have shared many room ideas with you in our magazine. But we're quite sure that your ideas are just as fabulous, if not more so. That's why we have our SWISS KRONO Creators Club on Instagram. To show off, to share moments of bliss, to offer inspiration: for Your Home. story. We can't wait to see you there! Consider yourself invited.

#swisskronocreatorsclub

The 5G click system means that KRONOTEX floors are simple and easy for anyone to install. All you need besides your new dream flooring and accessories are a few handy helpers:

- ✓ a pen
 - ✓ a few clothes pins
 - ✓ a measuring stick
 - ✓ a square
- and, highly recommended,
 as it saves a lot of effort and time:
 ✓ a laminate cutter.

For master painter Dörthe Krüger-Mähl of craft construction company MFG, interior design is a complete concept encompassing floor and wall design.

You can find important tips relating to specific questions about installing KRONOTEX floors on our YouTube channel.

We recommend taking a look before you begin working. You'll soon see: installation is so easy!

The HERRINGBONE collection is an exception. Installing floors in a fishbone pattern requires great precision and experience in craftsmanship. Anyone who does not have this expertise should contact a specialist company.
